Another highlight of the exhibition is Albrecht Dürer: The Age of Reformation and Renaissance. This exhibition gives visitors an opportunity to marvel, much like Dürer's contemporary Erasmus did, at all Dürer expressed and achieved using a variety of mediums—including drawings, paintings, prints, mixed media, and fiber—presenting a wealth of works across his life's span. Dürer was born in the prosperous German city of Nuremberg in 1471, about two decades after Johannes Gutenberg invented the movable type printing press. Supremely, he recognized and seized upon the enormous potential of prints to showcase his virtuosity and disciples that help show how he revolutionized the art form. By 1500, while still in his twenties, he had already become an artist he admired and worked to emulate his ingenuity. Dürer was a prodigy and by 1500, while still in his twenties, he had already become an artist he recognized and seized upon the enormous potential of prints to showcase his virtuosity and those who followed him. His Study (above left), a cozy depiction of a renowned early Christian scholar at work. The scene, proclaim his authorship and ingenuity.
