I've Been working this slave shift
I'm about to tip over

You see My mama had odd jobs
Oddly they didn't care about her odds
She was on a deathbed several times
And couldn't get a get well card
They said retail don't care about your tail
Better sell our customers that fairytale
Oh you're sick
We wish you well
Tell your kids we hope they fail
So they can come and make your sell
Modern day jail
No bail

You Walk into work everyday with a Big smile on your face
Requirement
Realized you deserved more than What they give you
Enlightenment
No matter what you do
They still place judgement
They try to be the God In your life
By you placing nothing above it
Worshipping the dollar like it's soul
Ties

Too tired to chase your own dreams
So you settle for their lies
Notice how on the 1st day you was Excited to have a new job by the 6th Day realize you was a new
Slave
It's a new age of slavery
All this misguided bravery

To think that she was 17 and just had a baby
She was making minimum wage
She was under age
She was born and raised to be a corporate slave
It ridiculous can't get anymore meticulous
Than this

I've been working this slave shift
I'm about to tip over

They asked me what I wanted to be when I was younger
I said happy
Too many times did I see
My parents on the grind and not have time for me
I just want that simplicity of living free
But why wasn't I born with a silver spoon in my mouth
Why Did I have to doubt that I would one day be financially stable
I'm unable to see that being possible without me having to sell the most precious parts of me
So Parton me I as humbly refuse to be abused by a corporation that thinks I'm so easily replaceable
Telling me my dreams is so easily erasable
I Walk into work and they say look how much we pay you to be miserable
The only reason I show up is because my bills are due
Now don't shoot the messenger I'm just being real with you
I'm along side you Singing old negro spirituals

I've been working this
